#2.

from the opposite direction on Easton Ave. There is a large arc light at this corner. The driver of the other car began to turn into Huntington Street, but seeing McCaffery's car, continued along Easton Avenue, swerving close to McCaffery's car.
Gorsline was driving the other car, and there was a lady in the seat beside him. When I asked McCaffery who the woman was, he adopted a mysterious manner.

He refused to tell me who she was. At first it seemed that he knew who she was, but did not want to tell, and then he said that he did not know her name, but knew her by sight. He told me that he had seen her during the months of February and March 1923 in the Kosey Korner at the corner of George Street and Throop Avenue. Finally he said Gorsline knows her name, and suggested that I ask him.
I told him that considering Gorsline's statement to the State Police, that would probably be futile. He then said that he would face Gorsline and he was sure that Gorsline would acknowledge the truth of his statement, and disclose the name of the woman with whom he was. McCaffery left with me to go to Mr. Bearman's house. Learning that you were in New Brunswick, you and Mr. Neilson came to Mr. Bearman's house, where we all conferred with Mr. McCaffery. He related his story again two or three times. At this time he added to his story, that shortly before seeing the car which he said Gorsline was driving, he saw a number of cars going down Easton Avenue at a high rate of speed. He also declared that he left Tenneson's saloon at ten minutes to eleven. He had made this same mistake in his statement to me.

McCaffery still did not commit himself as to whether he knew the name of the woman to whom he referred, and refused to tell it, or whether he did not know her name.
Finally we advised him to go to the State Police and to tell his story, whereupon he left and returned to the saloon at 173 French Street.
